Grow Your Own

Some families in Valencia don't wait for the supermarket. They grow it themselves — or share a garden with the neighbours.

Every week, people go to the supermarket to buy vegetables like green beans and cucumbers that come from big farms. But most people think food from the garden is fresher and tastes better.

Some lucky families have got space to grow food at home — carrots, onions, cabbages. Families without space sometimes work together in a community garden instead.

It's easier than you think. First you dig. Then you plant the seeds. Remember to water the plants! You also have to weed the garden sometimes. When the vegetables are ripe, they're ready to pick.

"When the vegetables are ripe, they're ready to pick."

Fresh food or tinned food?

In opinion writing, you say what you think — and give reasons. Use I think, in my opinion, I believe.

Fresh food or tinned food?

When you shop for food, you can buy fresh food or tinned food. Which is better? I think fresh food tastes better.

Fresh food is good for you. It hasn't got any extra salt or sugar. But you have to wash it first because sometimes it's a bit dirty.

There are some positive and negative things about tinned food, too. In my opinion, tinned food is more convenient because it lasts longer than fresh food. But tinned food usually has extra salt or sugar, and I believe this is bad for you.

I think fresh food is better than tinned food.

The Farms of the Future

How much space do you need to grow 10,000 heads of lettuce a day? Not that much, it turns out.

On an indoor farm in Miyagi, Japan, farmers grow that much lettuce every day — in a building smaller than half a football pitch. They grow it on shelves, up to fifteen levels high. Special LED lights help it grow faster.

Indoor farms use less water than outdoor farms. And there's another big advantage: less waste. On outdoor farms, some plants are damaged and farmers can't sell them — sometimes they have to throw away more than thirty per cent of the lettuce they grow.

On this indoor farm, they throw away less than three per cent. Less water, less waste, more lettuce, faster.

Would you eat lettuce grown under lights, with no sun and no soil? Many people in Japan already do.

INDOOR FARM FACTS

10,000 heads of lettuce a day
